FIRST RESPONDENT

OTHER RESPONDENTS

SECOND to EIGHTH RESPONDENT

JUDGMENT – WRIGHT J

1. The applicant, Fedgroup lent money to the first respondent, Meade. The second to eighth respondents bound themselves as sureties to Fedgroup for the indebtedness of Meade to Fedgroup.
2. Fedgroup, armed with standard form agreements, with lots of small print in its favour seeks judgment for the unpaid lendings, interest and costs.
3. Meade resists.
4. It says that it did not contract with Fedgroup but with an entity called Prospertec. The written agreement, headed “ Fedgroup “ shows that the Meade contracted with “ Prospertec (Pty) Ltd T/A Fedgroup Private Capital “. There is an allegation in the founding affidavit that Prospertec changed its name to that of the cited applicant. This defence gains no traction.
5. There is a bald allegation that the suretyships were signed as a result of misrepresentation. This defence holds no water, particularly when considered with the gist of the defence as set out below.
6. It is alleged that the National Credit Act 34 of 2005 applies and that Fedgroup has not complied with its provisions. From the large sums of money alleged by Meade to be involved, particularly relating to its turnover, it is clear that the Act is not applicable.
7. The gist of the defence is that Meade is a property developer. It was allegedly approached by a company, apparently in the Fedgroup stable, with a view to lending Meade money so that Meade could proceed with the development of certain land. It is alleged that the loan in question was but one of many between Fedgroup and entities related to Meade. It is alleged that the loan in question must be considered in context. It is alleged that Fedgroup would provide a large sum or sums so that all developments in Meade and its related entities could proceed. It was envisaged that repayment would be once the developments were complete and all units sold. Alternatively, repayment could be in the form of profit share. If necessary, repayment would be once alternative funding could be obtained.
8. The bottom line of the defence is that the context shows, and it was therefore agreed, notwithstanding the written agreement, that if push came to shove, Fedgroup could not recover unless all units were sold or “ if and when “ alternative funding was obtained by Meade.
9. Numerous emails between Fedgroup and Meade reveal that the above ideas were set out in correspondence before and after the conclusion of the agreement. There is no email from Fedgroup in which it agreed to the bottom line as suggested by Meade.
10. It would have been surprising to read that Fedgroup agreed that, at the end of the day, repayment need only be made if Meade could find alternative funding.

11. There is no evidence that Meade queried any debit prior to receipt of the present application.
12. In my view, the defence offered is no defence in law.
13. Counsel for the applicant handed up a draft order.
